the United States undertakes the task of furnishing an estimate of the industrial wealth of the country. A store of information is thus obtained which is not accessible in any other country of the world-precious material for economic study, when it is used with discernment. Here is one direction, at least, in which the American people have never realized their own superiority.

Since Alexander Hamilton framed his policy of national development and submitted to Congress his report upon manufactures, the people of the United States have carefully attempted to foster the manufacturing interests. for others of an entirely different meaning. designations by their sounds or forms are very complex processes, showing the intimate relations that exist between these coordinating functions. The latter may be singly or collectively affected in different degrees, so that an aphasic person, for instance, may lose the power to express different words by pen or tongue, may forget their significance or indications, may not recognize or apply them when heard or written, or may voluntarily substitute them for others of an entirely different meaning.

The latest studies of these remarkable manufacturing interests. From 1850 to 1890 the capital reported as invested in American manufactures in-creased more than 1,000 per cent, the num-ber of employes more than 350 per cent, the total amount of wages more than 800 the total amount of wages more than 800 per cent, the cost of raw materials more than 800 per cent, the value of the products nearly 800 per cent. These figures are mere approximations, of course, but as time passes the statistics of manufactures are becoming more accurate, so much so that when the returns of the twelfth census are tabulated they may be taken as a true picture of the industrial condition of this branch of industry.

the outside world.

The latest studies of these remarkable disabilities have demonstrated the close intercommunication of the different brain centers which respectively control the varied functions involved. It would thus appear, from the standpoint of ordinary comparison, to be either a question of cut or crossed wires along corporate lines or of trouble with the switchboard itself.

When the aphasic attack occurs suddenly, as it sometimes dees, the sufferer, when away from those who know him, is certainly in a very bad way, as was painfully evident in the instance of the young man referred to, who, being lost for days, eveniually only found his home by the merest accident. All this occurred in the heart of a great city in which there were thousands of people with whom he must have come in more or less direct contact, and who would have been glad to have assisted him in his trouble. It is difficult to conjecture what might have become of the poor sufferer under different circumstances. Indeed, the contemplation of possibilities in other directions may throw some light on the numerous sudden and seemingly unaccountable disappearances of persons who, when last seen, were apparently in good health and in possession of all their faculties. It is not unreasonable to suppose that some of the likewise afflicted subjects are never found, in spite of the widest advertising, unless by a happy chance they meet with some one who recognizes them.

a happy chance they meet with some one in spite of the widest advertising, unless by a happy chance they meet with some one who recognizes them.

It is quite true that all the stray ones do not come under this category, as some are murdered and hidden, others are drowned and not recovered, while still others are insane and clude their keepers; but in view of the facts before us we may have another explanation for some of the strange things that happen in a great city.

Perhaps, after all, the best practical lesson taught by the sad story of this lost young man is that which applies to like and possible experiences in ourselves. Loss of consciousness is always deplorable, but consequent helplessness away from home is doubly so, especially when there are no means of identifying the victim. It is because we think that nothing will happen that we so seldom carry our addresses with us. Holmes, Trenton Staats-Gazette; James Kerney, Hoboken Observer and Trenton True American; Col. E. C.
